It's tough to support yourself if your everyday commute involves a five-mile walk. Imagine how your productivity would be drained, your work hours diminished. That's the situation in many parts of the world. And that's the reason Dave Schweidenback founded Pedals for Progress. To offer people the means to better support themselves by providing low-cost transportation.

Pedals for Progress is a not-for-profit organization that takes locally donated bikes and distributes them overseas. Since 1991, it has collected and distributed more than 30,000 bikes and $5 million in parts around the world. So kids in Honduras can attend school miles away. So medics in Madagascar can reach remote villages. And so on.

Where wheels spin, lives turn around.

Needless to say, Pedals for Progress has a demanding and unique set of international shipping needs. Dave trusts only FedEx when it comes to delivering essential documents on an urgent timeline. He says, "Whoever holds the bills of lading and export documents when that load of bikes lands...they own the crate. So documents have to be in my partner's hands on time." FedEx International Priority® is the delivery service he relies on overseas.

If you want to know how FedEx can simplify your international shipping, whether it's for single documents or large crates, see the reverse side or call (800)247-4747.

So here's to Pedals for Progress and Dave Schweidenback. A guy who can take rubber and aluminum and build a better world.

Pedals for Progress provides workers in developing countries with affordable, environmentally sound transportation. You can visit Pedals for Progress at www.p4p.org.
